

Uniting in Support of the Global Fund

The Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria is funded by governments and private sector donors around the world and is renowned for its accountability and results.

This year is a make-or-break moment in the HIV response.

- The U.S. government has slashed HIV and global health funding.
- More countries are retreating from their international commitments.
- Vital community-led organizations are on the brink of closing.
- Proven HIV prevention programs for women and LGBTIQ communities are under attack.

We cannot afford to lose the strength of the Global Fund as well.

Since 2002, the Global Fund has invested more than US $65 billion worldwide in global health programs across 100+ countries. Now is the time to come together and ensure it is fully funded.

We call on the Canadian government to honour our country's role as a trusted partner and leader in global health by making a bold pledge to the Global Fund.

– Meg French, Executive Director, Stephen Lewis Foundation

Why the Global Fund matters

The Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria is a proven international partnership that:

- Saves lives
- Strengthens civil society
- Protects global health

Since 2002, the Global Fund has saved 65 million lives and helped reduce the combined death rate related to HIV, TB and malaria by more than 60%.

What makes it so effective?

The Global Fund's strength lies in partnership and scale:

- Governments and donors unite to provide unparalleled financial resources.
- Civil society, health providers, researchers, and community leaders ensure funds have maximum local impact.
- Countries lead their own response, tailoring strategies to their political, cultural and epidemiological realities.

In addition, the Global Fund invests in health systems strengthening, building "climate-resilient, crisis-ready health and community systems that serve people in the poorest and most marginalized communities."

Unrivalled in Impact

The Global Fund mobilizes an indispensable share of international health funding

23%
for HIV

76%
for TB

62%
for malaria

2025: A year for bold leadership

The Global Fund operates on three-year funding cycles, known as replenishments. This year is a replenishment year and a defining moment for Canada.

By stepping up with a pledge of $457 million a year ($1.37 billion over 3 years), Canada can show the leadership the world urgently needs.

With full funding, the Global Fund could save 23 million additional lives and cut death rates from these diseases by another 64%.

Canada's pledge can be the catalyst that inspires other countries to match our ambition, ensuring this global partnership delivers on its promise of a healthier, more just world.
